

Remember when...? – Christmas Dinner

Description

When I grew up, we never had a house. Until adulthood, I always lived in a second floor apartment. This meant that any large gathering was nearly impossible, except for one year.

Holiday schedule

Every holiday season was pretty similar as far as family gathering was concerned. We were staying home for Christmas Eve, we would go to my maternal grandparents for Christmas day, and to my paternal grandparents for New Years day. My Mom had 4 siblings, which made for a large enough gathering, but my Dad had 10 siblings which made an even larger group. Both sets of grandparents lived in a house they owned, so they all had more space than we did.

Why not us?

My Mom wanted to invite the family over but with a kitchen that could maybe accommodate 8 people (no dining room), how could she do it?

Not in the kitchen

Although most rooms in the apartment were pretty much the same size, my parents decided to be a bit creative. They converted their bedroom into a dining room. To me, it was a little odd as all the furniture had to be moved in my bedroom. Only the very large dresser stayed and served as a side board for food. We must have borrowed something to create a longer table.

We all fit

I am not sure how many were sitting. At the time, I only had 4 cousins, so as we always did at my grandma, the kids were eating on a separate small table (maybe in the kitchen). I think my Mom organized another family gathering, years later when we were in a larger apartment (3 bedrooms), and I vaguely remember that the table was actually placed from the kitchen and extending in the hallway. Yes, my Mom was creative, but those were the only two family gathering that she held, especially since the family grew larger with the years and the apartment stayed the same size.

How about you? What kind of gathering do you remember from the holiday season (or other time)? Which one was special and why? Share your story in the comments below.

Date Created

December 7, 2015

Author

myclone