

Trees play an important part in our world. They are like the vacuum of our planet as trees absorb harmful pollutants and release oxygen for every living creature to breathe. They also provide us food, shade, shelter, timber for construction, and many more. There are many types of trees and their sizes can be small to large depending on the area and environment.

You might have encountered lots of different trees. You might even have a bunch of them in your own backyard. Whether you're a tree lover or one of those people who are just beginning to take interest in trees, we hope that these layouts will make you admire trees even more and give you ideas for your next awesome project.

Forest trees

Forest trees play a vital role in forest ecosystems. Their continued existence is very significant for many flora and fauna species to thrive. They are considered home by countless animals in the wild. They also give out a cool breeze and fresh air for many outdoor enthusiasts who just love to spend time close to nature and away from the hectic city life.

Have you visited a forest lately? Do you enjoy looking and snapping some pics at the huge and tall trees there?

Trees in the City

While forest trees might be fascinating, we can't also deny that there are certain trees in the urban areas that we find eye-catching and worthy of a pic. It may be because of the beautiful colors of their leaves or that spot they're in reminds us of a very special memory. Whatever the reason you may have, it's absolutely a great idea to showcase them in a layout so you'll have more reasons to smile.

Fruit Trees

While some might be fond of flowering trees, others love climbing and picking some fresh fruits from trees. It's a fun activity and we know you'd agree that nothing beats freshly picked fruits. You'll even feel a sense of achievement if it was grown in your backyard or garden.
