

The weather is getting colder, and sending some chilly winter vibes. And what better way to enjoy the snow than making our very own version of a snowman. Typically, a snowman consists of three large snowballs of different sizes. It has some added stuff for facial features and sometimes, people even put hats and scarves to make their snowmen look more adorable.

Kids and even adults alike find it fun to build a snowman. It's a classic winter activity that's not just free but also helps in developing creativity and teamwork. It can also become a way to reconnect and get closer with your loved ones. It may be an old tradition but it's still popular up to these days.

When was the first time you tried building your own snowman? Did you enjoy it? Does your family do this activity every winter? Tell that story by creating a fun scrapbook project featuring your snowman experience. Here are some great layouts to inspire you.
