Description

A festival is an event ordinarily celebrated by a community and centering on some characteristic aspect of that community and its religion or culture. This constitutes typical cases of glocalization, as well as the high culture-low culture interrelationship. Festivals often serve to fulfill specific communal purposes, especially in regard to commemoration or thanking to the gods, goddesses or saints: they're called patronal festivals. They may also provide entertainment, which was particularly important to local communities before the advent of mass-produced entertainment.

There are unique festivals celebrated all over the world. Cultural, religious, art, and music festivals connect us to our roots, our culture, and our values. They help us celebrate our heritage and our traditions. Whether itâ??s a new yearâ??s celebration or an art festival with decades of history, festivals are an important part of our lives.

Have you been to some places and attended different festivals? What type of festival did you enjoy the most? Take a look at some great and lovely layouts below that are related to celebrating festivals and be inspired to create your own festival-themed scrapbook pages!

Carnivals

This type of festival may have its roots in religion, but today itâ??s less about celebrating religious figures and more about partying hard. Carnival celebrations take place in the streets, with parades full of people, typically with lots of colorful floats on display, carried down city streets. There are costumes, masks, confetti, balloons and, above all, music. These, for sure, are fun and great to celebrate!

Food and Agriculture

Food festivals are a great way to try new foods and learn about the food culture of an area. They are usually based on traditional farming techniques and the preparation of food served. Most festivals are related to the time period in which they are celebrated. A food festival can even be a great place to make new friends. If you are planning your next vacation, consider going to a food festival.
